EXPLORATIONS IN UTAH AND ARIZONA.

The Salt Lake Tribune of December 7 says of the discoveries made by the Baldwin Exploring Expedition:

This expedition, which was organized with Major M. A. Baldwin as chief, Thos. M. Blossom, E. M., as mineralogist and assayer, and W. T. Broadman, engineer, for the purpose of exploring the middle and southern portions of Utah, and the northern part of Arizona, did not confine its investigations to the mineral resources of the country, but also made a complete topographical examination of the region passed over. During the progress of the expedition a number of natural curiosities were examined. On the west side of San Pete Valley, at the base of a range of mountains running parallel with it, a solid conglomerate wait, nearly six miles in length, three hundred feet thick, a hundred feet in height, and almost perpendicular, was found. This natural rampart extends across the country like the work of some gigantic artisan, and has several immense gateways opposite win Exploring Expedition: rampart extends across the country like the work of some gigantic artisan, and has several immense gateways opposite the mouths of the canyons which debouch into the plain, and have evidently cat through the obstruction. These openings are from one hundred to two hundred feet in width, and present the appearance of entrances through an immense fortification. Between the wall and the base of the mountains there is a narrow plateau, and seen through the gateways, the perspective view of the country on either side, is described as magnificent in the extreme, and entirely unique in its character. Scenery of a remarkable character is also found in the mountains around Coal Creek Canyon, near Harmony, in Iron county. The mountains are of bright red sandstone, and nearly perpendicular, and five immense projections upwards of 2,000 feet in hight, stand out like walls at regular intervals at right angles, forming, as it were, six gigantic stalls, against the side of the mountain. These projections being also of red sandstone, entirely bare and perpendicular, produce a startling effect, and constitute one of the wonders.

ing also of red sandstone, entirely bare and perpendicular, produce a startling effect, and constitute one of the wonders in the scenery of Southern Utah. In fact, the members of the expediton speaking lowing terms of the natural attractions of Iron county, and predict that when the county is opened by a railroad, it will become an attractive place of sumer resort. Perhaps the most remarkable natural discovery made by the expedition was that of an ice spring in a barning desert. This strange phenomenon is situated about eight miles west of the town of Fillmore, in Millard county, and is located in a bed of lava which has flowed from a volcano called Crater and is located in a bed of lava which has flowed from a volcano called Crater Monntain, about four miles distant, but which is now extinct. The lava is from ten to twelve feet thick, and very porous. The spring is three feet in diameter, and is surrounded by solid ice. On a hot day in August, when the expedition visited the spot, the thermometor on the desert not twenty feet distant from the spring stood at 100 degrees, while the water in the spring stood at freezing. It is a matter of conjecture whether the ice is formed by rapid evaboration of water through the porous lava, or whether it is a winter ice deposit, protected by the superincumbent lava bed through the Summer. The summit of Crater Mountain is 600 feet above the plain, and its form is that of the frustrum of Crater Mountain is 500 feet above the plain, and its form is that of the frustrum of a cone. Several of the members of the expedition ascended to the top and clambered down into the extinct crater 630 feet or 30 feet below the level of the ciambered down into the extinct crater 630 feet or 30 feet below the level of the plain at its base. There are marks of violent volcanic action everywhere, and the lava flow has extended for miles over the surrounding country. The ascent of Mount Nebo was made by Major Baldwin, Mr. Biossom and two others. This mountain, which is the highest in Utah, is in Juab county, is 11,865 feet high, and is covered with perpetual snow. The party started upon the undertaking at 2 o clock one Saturday afternoon, with saddle and pack animals, by way of North Canyon, and advanced as far as possible for the night, and the next morning at three o'clock proceded on foot. Upon reaching the summit the view afforded amply repaid them for their labors. The whole of Utah seemed mapped out at their feet. Toward the East was beheld San Pete and other valleys, and the Wasatch range, westward for a distance of nearly two hundred miles the desert plains and salt beds of Nevada were distinctly visible, while to the north Utah Lake and Salt Lake glistoned in the sunshine, and the range of vision was only limited by Promontory mountains. A complete record of observations was kept during the progress of the expedition, with elevations, assays of ores, natural features and characteristics of the country, which, when published, will reflect credit upon the leaders of the expedition and contain invaluable information concerning the resources of Utah.

A Memory Only,—In our large cities

A Memory Only.—In our large cities the race of children is extinct. Fashionable and high pressured civilization have destroyed it. We no longer see around us that tribe of joyous, light-hearted little creatures, in whose laughter there was sweetest music, in whose pranks and pastimes there was innocent and healthful amusement. We only see demure and staid young masters and misses, trained to comport themselves in the most exact manner before company, and to regard the promptings of their nature as worthy only of repression and avoidance. Almost from the moment they are able to todds on their feet, the children of our middle and upper classes are taught to behave in a constrained and artificial manner. Then, they walk, talk, and play by rule, and early learn the difference between company and home manners. Then, in a few years, when they become old enough to notice the dress they war and to pay attention to it, the lessons of vanity and display they receive are really melancholy to contemplate. Creatures of seven, eight or ten years of age are clad in the finest garments, at a cost that would have kept their grandmothers in wardrobe for tweive months. Happilly for the boys years of age are clad in the finest garments, at a cost that would have kept their grandmothers in wardrobe for twelve months. Happily for the boys their dress is such that it cannot be varied to any extent, or made extravagantly expensive; but, unfortunately for them, parental affection can be quite as well exhibited in the trinkets and jewelry with which they may be bedecked. It is not unusual, newadays, to see "young gentlemen," who have not yet entered their tesms, sporting watches and rings of the finest description, and priding out of them a vast deal mere than their elders. Is this consistent with the teachings of our democratic institutions? Is this the way to provide strength for a growing nation? We want no dolls and puppets to take the place of America's sturdy sons and daughters, but active men and women who will not shrink from the labor of becoming useful. The stamins of future parents depends on the training children now receive, and fathers and mothers would do well to set an extending the stamins of future parents depends on the training children now receive, and fathers and mothers would do well to set an ex-
